Historical reconstruction

Holešovice | Prague

Complete reconstruction of the historic slaughterhouse building from 1895 in the Prague – Holešovice Market. The reconstruction included the removal of non-original additions from 1928, which disrupted the symmetry of the building, typical of representative buildings from this period. The Prague Rudolfinum, for example, was built in a similar style. The decorative facade, original stucco, and unique interior were professionally restored. The roof is adorned with COMAX ComBo and COMAX Falc roofing, which perfectly met the expectations of preservationists.

From flat to pitched

Dívčí Hrady | Prague

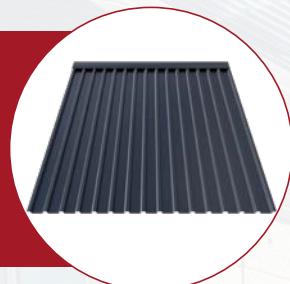

During the renovation of the flat roof of an apartment building in Prague, COMAX Trapeze steel roofing with a premium PUR/PA surface finish was chosen. This combination significantly extends the service life of the entire building. The unique roofing system not only improves the aesthetic appearance of the entire building, but also offers practical advantages. Thanks to its thermal insulation properties, the gable roof contributes to energy savings in heating, thereby reducing operating costs and increasing the comfort of residents.
